Rock Creek Dam Incident, Auburn, Placer County

- On 01/10/17 at 2142 hours, the Pacific Gas and Electric (PG&E) reported that an uncontrolled overflow of the Rock Creek Dam has occurred due to recent flood waters due to the lake reaching capacity. The water is spilling through the spillway. The California State Warning Center (CSWC) conducted all appropriate notifications per Standard Operating Procedure (SOP). There is currently no threat to the public. The Sheriff's Department would be the final authority to make a decision on whether or not to perform precautionary evacuations due to the proximity of structures to the dam.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Blizzard conditions will remain in effect for portions of the Sierra through this morning with 2-4 feet of snow expected above 6,000 feet.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

Key Points

- Current weather system moving through is producing very strong winds along with heavy rain and snow. Strong gusty winds, nearly statewide, will be capable of downing trees & powerlines with increased threat of prolonged power outages. Significant impacts to travel expected.
- There is a renewed threat of rock and mud slides with additional precipitation today into Wednesday. Several rivers will peak again today into Wednesday with flooding (see slide #5).
- All rivers are expected to fall below flood stage by Wednesday. However, even after rivers crest, waters will continue to run high for several more days.
- Another much weaker weather system will move southeast through CA Thursday/Friday with beneficial rains to southern CA.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

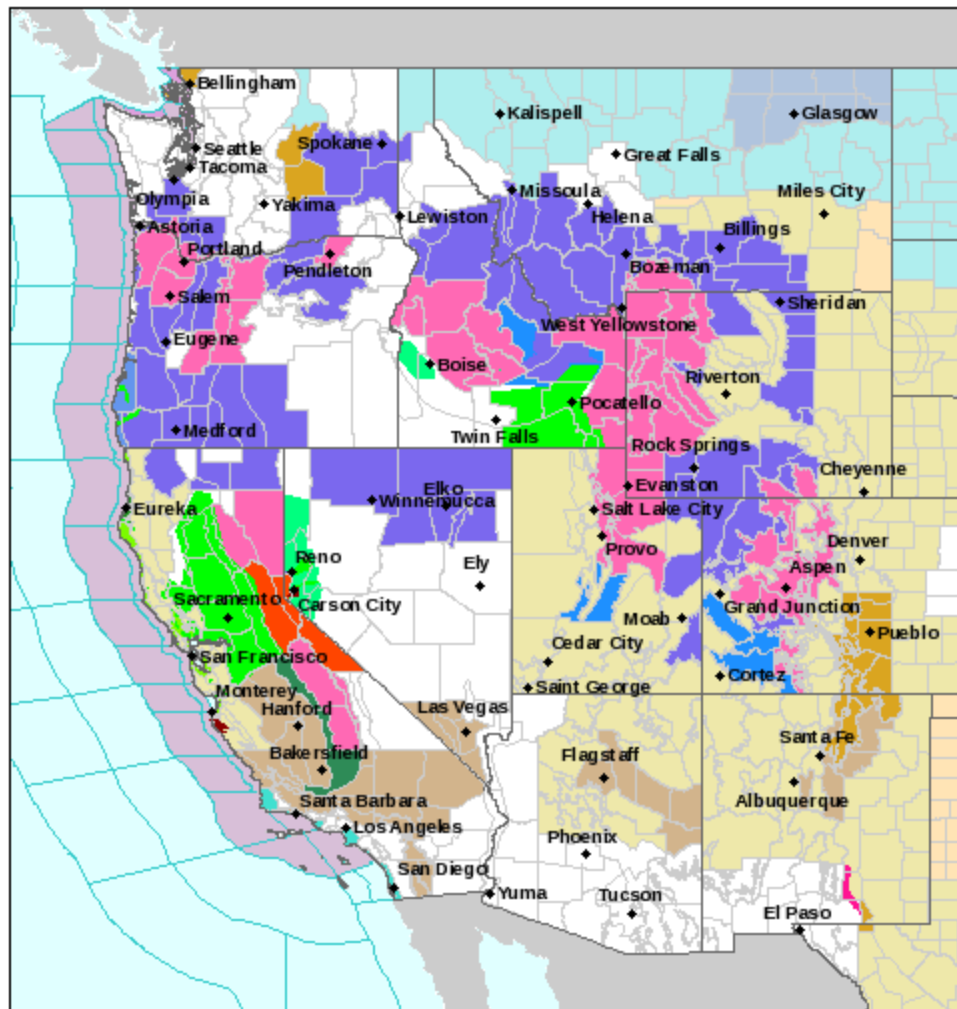

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Gusty southerly winds will be on the increase with many areas having a period of sustained wind speeds of 15-30 mph and gusts 40-55 mph rather common. Water courses will run high and some flooding is anticipated. Saturated soils and the strong winds may well blow down some trees as well. Snow levels will be 3000-4000 feet in the north and 4500-5500 feet in the south. Precipitation will continue well into Thursday, although it will generally become more showery starting later tonight. Snow levels today will vary from 2000-3000 feet in the north and 3500-4500 feet in the south. Mountain travel may become a little easier today, but will still be challenging. The gusty southerly winds will continue over the eastern half of the region overnight, but they will be decreasing to mostly 10-20 mph with gusts to around 30 mph. Dry weather is expected Friday through Monday as high pressure moves over the region. Periods of overnight and morning valley fog may develop and persist, but some light northerly winds may also develop in the northern Sacramento Valley in particular and would keep that area somewhat fog-free. Another major, wet weather system may move into the region starting late next Tuesday and last a couple of days.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A very wet, windy weather system will be over the region today with locally heavy rain or snow persisting for some time. Mountain travel will be difficult for much of the day, and snow levels will mostly be 3000-5000 feet in the north and 4500-5500 feet in the south. Southerly winds will be on the increase this morning and a period of sustained speeds of 15-30 mph and gusts 45-55 mph is expected for many areas. Wet weather will continue into Thursday, but it will become lighter and generally more showery overnight. Snow levels Wednesday will drop to around 2000-3000 feet in the north and 3500-4500 in the south. The gusty southerly winds will decrease quite a bit over the eastern half of the North Ops region tonight, but they will still be gusting to 25-30 mph in a lot of places into early Wednesday before decreasing during the day. High-running water courses will be common with areas of flooding expected over the next few days. The soft, saturated soils and strong wind will also create ideal conditions to topple trees. Friday through the weekend will be dry and warmer as high pressure moves through the region. Valley fog will become possible, but where it forms may well depend on whether some light northerly winds develop. Next week another significantly wet weather system may move into the region starting late next Tuesday.
